

The new Health Spa Development for Lucknam Park Hotel is very much inspired by its settings in the gardens of the 17th century estate and its original Grade II listed structures.

Our aim for the new building was to be as respectful as possible to the existing surroundings and create a space that feels like an indoor extension to the gardens. The Architecture is guiding views to the outside and allowing as much natural daylight into the building as possible. While the new buildings minimalist external appearance and heights tie in perfectly with the directly adjacent original garden walls, it is not a copy but a modern interpretation. The buildings are connected by a glazed link which creates a transition space between old and new and leaving both buildings with their deserved position within the grounds.

Outstanding however is the very contemporary and highly technical approach of the design and fit-out. The attention to detail has been most important and has been carried through construction and cutting edge interior design.
